Glassboro State College is a state supported coeducational institution and is one of eight colleges in the New Jersey State College System.

Degrees are offered in business management, arts and sciences, fine and performing arts and many areas of teacher education. The college offers graduate programs in more than 20 areas of teacher education.

Glassboro is best known for its selection as the site for the historic summit conference between President Lyndon Johnson and Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin in 1967. The meetings were held in Hollybush, the then home of the college presidents. Dr. Mark Chamberlain, the college's current president, moved out in the early 1970's when the home was converted to a conference center and was opened for tours. It was also named as an historical landmark.

While Glassboro has always been known academically, in recent years baseball has also become synonymous with its name. Dr. Michael Briglia's Profs have been to three straight Div. III World Series and have been the reigning national champions for the past two years.
